Topic : You are minister of Youth Affairs of your country (in Africa). How do you resolve the problem of young people choosing to risk their lives to leave your country

In this essay, I will ~~address~~ imagine myself being a Minister of Youth Affairs in an African country, and how I would resolve the ongoing problem of young people choosing to risk their lives to leave my country. I will also address the problems of this in the real world and why they want to leave.

In many African countries, whole new recruitment firms have appeared. They are looking for cheap labour, and to get it, they will entice young Africans with stories of how great Europe is and how many opportunities they could get if they went there. They will ~~let~~ give them easy transport to Europe, but only if they work for them, for months, or even years on end. When they think they ~~have~~ (the Africans) have done enough work, they will smuggle them into Europe or the Middle East and will be poorly-rewarded security guards, or other degrading work. They will have to live in filthy accommodation in addition to this. Even when they do get to the 'promised land,' they will have to pay upfront facilitation fees, which, in my opinion, sounds like never ending, compound interest. The reason why these recruitment firms and their 'gang bosses' flourish is because they work with the elite citizens and the government. This shows how
