

RULE BOOKS 142
Good than that by dealing with differences we confront the question of the social and economic foundations of our communities. The social economic aspect of any community is determined by a group of people living in such area. There is low development and growth in communities where there is poor people or individuals and high growth and development in places where rich individuals stay for example in Ugandan towns there is a place called Muyenga which is a community for the rich and this leads to differences in communities.

A community brings all the community members in contact to each other because every human beings depends on each other. Human beings are like the three cooking stones whereby without one of the three cooking stones, cooking really fails. Therefore individuals are accountable to each other. Therefore this is of great importance.

A community is for practical purposes. The necessities of life rarely come from ones hands but rather from a complicated "web of mutuality" as Martin Luther King, Jr phrased it. And I have stayed in a community where there is both young and old people, including the adolescents, youth, Aged and many others. Therefore taking care of each other... is what community is about.

In conclusion, the existence of a community is important because it leads to Unity, comfort, love peace and harmony.