

but we are also compelled to build community not only because we are survivors in an existing world order but because we bring difference to a society that erases our differences. There is no human being who does not belong to any community. A community gives a companion, comfort and helps an individual to be committed and united in terms of community development and growth. Let me give you every good example, now if an individual wants to construct a residential house, a hotel, or an estate by virtue of him or her being a community member he can not do it alone (constructing a house alone) he will also need other people to help him. So all this accounts to the importance of society or community.

By building community we put order in the fragmented world. There is a common saying that "a community with good people is like a mouth with a tongue". The world is full of different communities for a case in point is the continents we have that is to say Asia, Africa, America and many others all these individuals are vital ~~to~~ each other. Africans provided cheap labour in early ages as slaves, much as today the whites now use machines, African continent is resourceful in minerals, oil and gas which is needed by other communities abroad.

A community is important it helps individuals to know their identity and belonging. Although most people have moved to different places but they know where they belong. Like right now ^{live} am in Kavere even if I go to Kampala the capital city of Uganda even if I die from Kampala my body will be brought back to Kavere because it's where I belong.