

Moreover, the displacement of people from their land has led to an increment in the number of street kids. These are people who absolutely have nowhere to stay therefore they have to resort only to streets.

In addition, land grabbing in Africa has led to over population.

People whose land are grabbed migrate to other places and subsequently increasing the population of that particular area.

A good number of us misunderstand what over population is. It does not necessarily mean too many people, but rather, over population is when the resources of an area cannot support the number of people.

To give you a practical example, when we were chased away from Nakawa, where we went to stay at my uncle's place is very small. A problem came in when our number could no longer be supported by the present resources.

There was serious land shortage that wasn't there in Nakawa where we used to stay before. If it was not because our land that was grabbed, we would not have that hardship. This is not happening to us but across Africa as we can see with the Gambella people in Ethiopia as Obang says.

As a consequence, land grabbing has led to over population which has led to unemployment.

A good number of people whose land were grabbed relied on agriculture as an occupation and many are uneducated. This makes them to stay jobless not only in Uganda but also in Ethiopia and across Africa.

This is my cry on behalf of Africa. How can we stay jobless because of investors.
