

Moreover, what is being done on the grabbed land in Africa is destroying our entire environment. Firstly, deforestation is one of the acts prevailing on some areas having forests. This is done to clear land for industries and some other investments. Before we go far, deforestation is the cutting down of trees in a large scale.

When trees are cut, carbondioxide which would have been used by the trees accumulates in the atmosphere leading to global warming.

Secondly, Industrialisation carried out in the grabbed land. This leads to accumulation of toxic gases in the atmosphere. As a result, it leads to the depletion of the ozone layer and this leads to grave repercussions.

Finally, destruction of wetlands for investments has led to soil erosion, reduction of rainfall infiltration and limiting water for irrigation and animals.

In conclusion, if land grabbing is to be done in an appropriate way, then it would be advantageous. What do I mean?

When a land is to be grabbed from the owner, the people concerned should come to a consensus with the owners. Secondly, the land grabbed must be replaced somewhere else. One great remedy is that we as a whole must feel for others, do what does not make someone else cry. Specifically in Uganda it is the government that is behind all these therefore, the government must think about the original inhabitants before they are displaced.

What people are doing and saying about land grabbing is not effective since the whole dominion is from the government. Land grabbing in future will lead to numerous homeless people and many with agony therefore we must stand as one for unity.
